

groundwater mounding

Localized increase in the elevation of a water table that results from the downward percolation of additional liquid toward groundwater.