

percolation test

Measurement of the drop in water level in a boring as water moves into the surrounding soil material; although sometimes conducted during site assessment for onsite/decentralized systems (often referred to as a "perc test"), soil morphological evaluation is the preferred method to determine hydraulic capacity and treatment potential of a given site.