

topographic survey

survey made for locating objects and measuring the relief, roughness, or three-dimensional variations of the earth's surface; detailed information is obtained pertaining to elevations as well as to the locations of man-made and natural features (buildings, roads, streams, etc.); also known as a topographic map.