

ordinary high-water level

Elevation delineating the highest water level that has been maintained for a sufficient period to leave evidence upon the landscape; commonly the point where the natural vegetation changes from predominantly aquatic to predominantly terrestrial.